Quick Take: Toyota - The robotics thesis starts to materialize

Recent media reports suggest that Toyota may deploy 400k humanoid robots across its manufacturing operations. We view this as part of the broader trend we highlighted in our earlier report, ‘The House of Toyota: Toyota’s robotics efforts are beginning to surface, and we expect more to follow’. We expect robotics-related announcements to become more frequent going forward as Toyota accelerates its robotics efforts, with increased visibility possibly strengthening investor appreciation of a potential growth platform beyond automobiles and support a re-rating of the shares.

The robotics thesis starts to materialize: According to media reports, Toyota has reportedly outlined plans to deploy 400k in-house developed humanoid robots across the group from 2028, including 150k units at Toyota Motor and 250k units at affiliated group companies. The report also indicated plans for annual investment of approximately JPY1 tn in factory refurbishment and automation, with humanoid robots as the key component of production-line upgrades, with "Eley" expected to be among the first models deployed.

Toyota’s multi-pathway approach to robotics: Toyota’s robotics strategy has taken a multi-pathway approach, centered on in-house, TRI, Walden, Boston Dynamics and Agility (all private). While partnerships with Boston Dynamics and Agility Robotics appear to have served as testing grounds, this development suggests that internally developed solutions will be the core of deployment. The "Eley", reported as the first deployment model, being developed by the Toyota Frontier Research Center (in-house division developing non-automotive technologies) further supports this view.

Robotics as a credible growth opportunity for Toyota: We initially estimated Toyota Motor internal demand of ~180k units, with further upside across the group. The company's updated target of 400k units across the group confirms our expectations, and we see scope for greater demand, from external sales to other automakers and industrial customers, and non-industrial applications. Based on internal demand alone, we roughly estimate a revenue opportunity of approximately JPY 2.4 tn and OP contribution of JPY 0.5 tn for Toyota.

We reiterate our bullish stance on Toyota: Hyundai’s valuation re-rating demonstrates the impact of credible humanoid robotics exposure, with its average P/E increasing to 10.5x YTD from a 5-year historical average of 5.8x. As Toyota begins to outline more detailed deployment targets, investment plans, and commercialization pathways for humanoid robots, we believe robotics could emerge as an incremental catalyst for Toyota’s valuation.
